The Functions of Government.

One of the notable discourses of the month was that delivered recently before the American Social Science Association of Boston by Judge W. J. Gaynor, of New York, on government and trusts.
We have not the space to give a review of the entire article, but we wish to make a record of some important truths stated bearing upon the functions of government.

"Society," said he, "is organized at all conly for the common wield, and the prime object of government is to promote distributive justice to all. The government which hinders that object, instead of hielping it; the government which by favoritism of the laws helps the few to aggrandize themselves out of the toll product of the many, has no right to exist. Government is for the general good and prosperity. Prosperity depends not merely on the amount produced, but in even greater degree upon how the total product is divided. Prosperity is the highest production which the community is capable of, consistent with the mental, spiritual and physical education, growth and health of its members, accompanied by a just distribution of the total product among the producer. This does not mean share and share alike, but according to the intelligence, the skill, the industry, which measured the productive capacity of each. He who produces most, whether his productive power be mental or physical, or both, should share accordingly, and so on down. This system rests wholly on individual competition, without government favor to any; and competition is the mother of excellence and growth in commerce, in the arts and in all things. But if the total products in the ratio of their productive capacities, then there is not a state of general prosperity, however large the total product. "Society," said he, "is organized at all not justly divided among the producers in the ratio of their productive capacities, then there is not a state of general prosperity, however large the total product may be. And if that condition be the result of the favoritism of government or of the laws, then has government failed at the one fundamental reason for the existence of government. These principles are accepted by all, and their mere statement suffices."

Judge Gaynor takes an optimistic view when he says that these principles are recognized by men at large, and that a mere statement of them suffices. It would be well for this government, and there would be fewer complications and fewer hardships, and government would be a greater blessing, if these principles were recognized and established and put itno operation. Unfortunately, there are many who think that government is to be employed by those in control for the benefit of a few favorites at the expense of the many.

Proceeding with the discussion, Judge Gaynor said that the most sacred duty of government is to take care to pass no statute and to do nothing to restrict production or to promote or make possible an unjust distribution of the aggreigate wealth created by industry, and in such wealth must be included all public franchises, for their value is created wholly by the combined industry and consequent growth of the community. He declared that while governments have been entirely successful in making laws and contrivances for the enrichment of the few, they have been signally unsuccessful in attempting to regulate commerce for the general welfare. "The history of such laws," said he, "Is that instead of good, they have done infinite harm. In this respect history teaches harm. In this respect history teaches beyond a doubt the wisdom of the political maxim that to govern least is to gov-By way of illustration he referred to the oft-repeated attempts in England especially, and also in France, to regulate trade by legislative enactments in contravention of the natural laws of trade. and he declared that to attempt to interfere with the operation of these natural laws was as vain as to attempt to intertit is hard for men of this generation, notwithstanding the lessons of the past for their guidance, to understand this simple proposition, and at each and every session of Congress and of the State legislatures, the same old attempts are made to regulate trade by law. Of course, the government must regulate corporations and hold them in check and make them, as their charters contemplate, the servants of the public. But in all such legislation diligent care must be exercised to prevent conflict between statutory enactments and the natural tem of laws that will preserve the rights of all men, preventing trespass, and yet giving to each individual the greatest liberty consistent with the rights of founded upon these principles, and neither and honorable endeavors, we shall have arrived at perfection, and we should have founded upon the true principles of Democracy.

It Will Not Down.

There was a novel outdoor minstrel show in Washington the other day on the Capitol grounds. Lew Dockstader, the minstrel, with a confederate, were the principal performers. Dockstader was made up to look like Booker Washington, and his confederate was made up to look like President Roosevelt. They a position near Washington's statue in the East plaza of the Capitol, and went through with a lot of monkey-shines before a picture-making machine In the pantomime "President Roosevelt" rescued "Booker Washington", from an mcomfortable position and made much of him, offering him a cigar with a polite bow, and finally assisting him to a carriage, which had been hired from a livery stable for the show. The entire performance was taken by the picturemaker and the performers then retired. What use is to be made of the pictures s not publicly known, but the incident goes to show that the President's entertainment of Booker Washington at the White House is still a live subject, and it may be that these pictures will figure in the forthcoming presidential campaign.

The White Plague

We are glad that Dr. Paulus Irving, of Richmond, addressed the Virginia Conference of Charitles and Correction on the subject of consumption. Dr. Irving referred to this disease as the great white plague of America, and contended that it was easily communicated from person to person. He also enumerated the several methods by which the disease s usually contracted-through the innalation of polluted air into the lungs, through a fresh wound, and through infeeted milk or other food. He stated that there are 4x00 consumptives in Virginia under the care of physicians, and I larger number without such care, naking, according to his estimate, at least 12,000 persons in the Old Dominion who are infected to a greater or less degree with this terrible disease. As for the country at large, he said that two persons die daily each minute from onsumption.

This statement is almost incredible, but the figures have been carefully compiled, and they are reliable, as far as statistics can be. *Consumption is the most dreadful of all prevalent diseases, and it is carrying off victims by the thousand. Yet the doctors tell us that consumption is absolutely a preventable disease, and that there is no excuse for us in no stamping it out. It is a subject to which we have before directed attention, and it is to be hoped that in the early future Virginia will take the necessary precautions, however expensive they may be, to rid her people of the white plague.

The Art Exhibit.

The present exhibit of the Art Club is one of the most creditable collections of paintings ever shown in this city. Many of the artists are regular contributors to the exhibition of the American Water Color and Miniature Society, as well as to the Society of American Artsts and the Academy of Design. This is a sufficient guarantee of the quality of the The important purpose of these exhibits, however, is not to gratify the artists who show them, but to furnish a standard of artistic culture that will raise the whole tone of the community in the matter of appreciation of the paintings.

We have progressed enormously in the matter of artistic taste when we compare our standard to that of the early seventies, but there is still a great field for improvement, and it is a public duty as well as pleasure to familiarize one's self as far as possible with good paintings.

The Art Club, The Wednesday Club and the Civic Improvement League are make life fuller and more beautiful for the city of Richmond and its inhabitants, and we commend the efforts as well as the means of each of these in-Quite so. That will be a people's convention.

The streets of Richmond, whether they be good or evil, are at least safely preserved from any adverse criticism by name, because they are unmarked. know that it is expensive and difficult to mark streets, but it is none the less

New York has recently made great progress in this department, and we cer-tainly ought not to be behind. Our city is becoming more and more of a center for visitors, and they drive around without knowing the name of the street they are on, nor have they any reasonable opportunity for finding it out because a great majority of the streets are utterly names might be. Let us begin at once to put up enduring and useful signs and do away with the limsy strips of tin that have heretofore adorned our street lamps for a brief space.

A North Carolina paper in commending to the voters a candidate for the Legislature, says among other good things:

"We believe he would make a good and true representative of all the people; is a farmer by occupation, a business man of experience, known all over the coun-ty to be as true as steel to every trust," Not only the "steel" trust, but to all others, one would imagine.

It takes a hustler to see all of the St. Louis show in one day, and it takes n good bank account to consume more time in viewing the same.

There are sometimes many slips 'twixt the cup and the lip, and they do say the honorable Mr. Roosevelt hasn't got that nomination yet.

Danville seems to have made a tie on the liquor question, and we suspect a dispensary will be the final upshot of the whole husiness.

The trouble about it is that no Southern man of parts wants that fag end position on either of the national tickets. The St. Louis Exposition was, like many of its predecessors, plucked a little too soon-before it got ripe, as it were. Norfolk claims to have had an honest election. While the lamp holds out to burn most any old town can come in. The "Tarheels" who are helping to make Richmond great brought their sticking qualities along with them.

It is wonderful how well satisfied Newport News is over its arrival on the placid shores of straight politics.

An auto-bus line all of one color would be a new kind of a "Jim Crow" car, but a "Jim Crow" all the same.

Spooner; yes, Spooner; Wouldn't that be a funny name to call a President of the United States by? North Carolina Richmonders spoke right out in meeting last night. The Parker boom has a joyful way of booming Itself.

The Charlotte News says: The slience of Judge Parker appears to be worrying the Republicans as much as it does some Democrats. In either case it does not seem to the silence that, like a poultice, comes to heal the hurt of sound.

The Durham Herald says; Mr. Bryan should know that a good many other Democrats are not enthusiastic supporters of Judge Parker, but believe that he is decent and feel that they can vote for him with a clear conscience.

STOMACH SHRUNK Blood Wine Brings it Back to Full Size and Health.

A recent hospital case showed that the stomach of a confirmed dyspeptic had shrunken to a third of its former size. Its walls were wrinkled and leathery.

Is your stomach-like that? Does an over-full feeling as soon as you have eaten moderately, oppress you? Then your stomach must be shrunken.

The upper picture shows how your stomach would be if it were healthy and sound, instead of shrivelled and disabled.

Miss Mattie Phelan, 82 Jackson street, Lawrence, Mass, says:

street, Lawrence, Mass., says:

"No one knows how miserable I felt before I took Blood Wine. I would wake up in the morning feeling tired. My bowels were never regular, and I suffered intensely from indigestion, and was subject to that over-full feeling after eating. If people would take Blood Wine for indigestion they would save a great deal in doctors' bills."
